MANAGER'S COMMENT

Introduction MIGO's NAV decreased 0.6%

After a strong start to the year February was a more difficult month for the trust with the share price and the NAV falling 0.6% and 0.5% respectively. The US market was up over 5% during the month buoyed by the performance of Nvidia. Markets are struggling to keep pace with the tech giants in the US, but we believe that the value in investment trusts will eventually come through.

Georgia Capital

Our strongest performer was Georgia Capital after its largest holding, Bank of Georgia, released a positive trading update including their purchase of an Armenian bank. The country is in a sweet spot in their economy with a growing middle class and the trust has a portfolio of companies benefiting from this move.

Riverstone Energy

Riverstone Energy issued a statement regarding a return of capital to shareholders. The trust is selling off its legacy oil and gas assets.

Chrysalis

One of Chrysalis' largest holdings, Klarna, announced that they were looking for a $20bn valuation at their potential IPO later in the year. This would add 13p to Chrysalis' net asset value and the shares rose in response.

Uranium

Our residual Uranium holdings were significant detractors during February. These spiked higher in January amid concerns that production problems would lead to shortages. At that time, we took the opportunity to sell around half of our exposure given the position had become extremely large. After their strong run the shares pulled back during the month. Given fifty percent of global supply comes from Kazakhstan and Russia, there is scope for geopolitical events to drive the spot price to new highs so we anticipate the macro should remain supportive despite their recent fall.

Phoenix Spree

Another detractor was Berlin residential specialist Phoenix Spree. Despite strong demand for rental housing in the German capital the shares continue to drift. There is little demand for this asset class amongst UK investors and it seems likely that the trust will lose next year's continuation vote. The shares ended the month at 152p compared to a nav of 361p.
